The National Association of Broadcaster's recent attempts at limiting satellite radio and its ability to broadcast local/regional information is ridiculous and alarming. In a free-market system, competition is healthy and should lead to better programming for all listeners, whether they are paying for satellite or listening to old-fashioned, free AM/FM radio. The point is, some people will choose to pay for satellite radio and others will not, therefore, an audience will always exist for both platforms and any legislation to limit satellite broadcasts is simply unfair.
